ADMINISTRATION, DESIGN, SCORING and ANALYSIS CONSIDERATIONS

ADMINISTRATION

- This questionnaire will take no more than 10 minutes to fill out.
- Tell participants why you are using the questionnaire, being clear that it is to evaluate the program and not them, to help make the program better.
- Participation should be voluntary, so tell participants that it is ok if they do not complete the questionnaire, and assure participants that there are no negative consequences if they don't want to complete it. Give them a way to do something else at the same time that looks similar to completing the questionnaire so that the confidentiality of this decision is protected. (For further information on ethical considerations in carrying out evaluations, see Ethics Resources)
- If used in a group setting, ensure that people feel safe and that the space is confidential; no one can see their answers (can see their screen or papers), put completed questionnaires into a sealed envelope.

DESIGN OPTIONS

Measuring change only after the end of an intervention: (this is the only option for this tool, because it directly asks about the effect of the intervention):

SCORING:

- Calculate the average of question 1. Average scores can range from 1 to 5. Higher scores are better. Note how many people have an average score of 3 or higher, showing good results.
- Add up how many people gave positive (choices 2,3, and 6) and negative answers (choices 1,4, and 5) to each choice in question 2.
- For questions 3 and 4, find the most common response that people gave and did not give (for example, if no one said they learned one of the messages that was most important in the intervention, note this).
- Add up how many people say yes to questions 5 and 6.
- Report the proportion of positive and negative answers to questions 1,2,5 and 6; and the most common themes in question 3 and 4.
